BOSTON'S SCHOOLS.

Boston's Most Exciting Municipal Campaign Closed.

Control of the Public Schools the Principal Issue.

Republican Mayor Elected---Probably their Committee Also.

Inter-State Commissioners Read the Riot Act to Railroads.

An Important Election.

BOSTON, December 11.—To-day's election closed upon the most exciting municipal campaign of recent date in this city. Bitter personalities have characterized all sides, and especially has this been the case in the discussion of the public school question. The principal issue of the campaign. This issue was brought before the people last summer by the school board in the removal from the schools of a certain text book which contained statements distasteful to Catholic clergy. Believing that in this action they saw an entering wedge by which Catholic supremacy in the control of the public schools was to be ultimately obtained, the friends of the public schools have held frequent meetings to protest against such interference, and public feeling has been brought up to the highest pitch. A mass meeting was held, and as the outcome a committee of one hundred, irrespective of party, was appointed to prepare a list of school committee men to be voted for, in addition that should consist of persons who were known to be "Friends of the public school system." Unusual interest was aroused on the question, and was most noticeable among women voters, and is shown by the fact that while only 837 were registered for the municipal election last year and only 775 voted, the total registration this year reached 20,261. The school board consists of twenty-four members, of whom eleven were elected to-day. Of the thirteen members who hold over, eight are of the Catholic faith, and it being held, by the republican convention that this is a sufficient representation of that sect upon the board, the ticket presented by the republicans to-day contained the names of no Catholics whatever. The republican ticket was endorsed by the citizens' committee of 100. Democrats, on the contrary, renominated the three retiring Catholic members. All tickets were badly scratched, and this, with the fact that the vote for school committee is so [illegible] they cast before will make it very late before definite results can be known, except for mayor, the republican nominee being elected.

BOSTON, December 11.—The probability is the complete republican ticket for school committee as endorsed by the committee of 100 is elected.

CHICAGO, December 11.—It is said the inter-state commissioners have [illegible] as misdeed business as is revealed by their present investigation. It appears all the roads have been employing scalpers to sell their through tickets much below regular rates, thus permitting the roads to quote higher proportionate rates for short distances. The commissioners decided that this must be stopped. They say they will render a decision that roads which cut rates through scalpers are guilty of violating the law. Managers of roads will be called before the commissioners to-day and will have the riot act read to them.

CHICAGO, December 11.—Judge Cooley laid down the law to managers and general passenger agents of the various railroads to-day. About two hundred officials assembled in the committee room of the Central Traffic association to hear what the chairman of the inter state commerce commission had to say. The judge unmercifully scored those roads that have been guilty of discrimination in passenger rates by dealing secretly with scalpers. He mentioned no names, but he gave [illegible] to understand that he knew which were the guilty ones, and that he had sufficient evidence in his possession to convict them of frequent violations of the law. He told them the practice would have to be stopped at once or the offenders would be prosecuted.

Mr. Cooley talked for nearly an hour, and at the close of his speech Colonel Morrison made a few remarks on the same subject.

Immediately after the adjournment of the meeting the general passenger agents convened and talked over the situation. Lines between Chicago and St. Paul and those between Chicago and Omaha agreed to give the necessary ten days notice to-morrow of the restoration of passenger rates between those points.

A Move in the Fish Dispute.

HALIFAX, N. S., December 11.—An important move in the practical settlement of a vital point in the fishery controversy has been made here. On Saturday the Gloucester schooner Nasarton, Captain Campbell, arrived from the banks with a cargo of halibut. Under the treaty of 1818, Captain Campbell claimed to land part of his cargo here entered it at the custom house, pay duty and transfer the balance to Boston. He landed 8000 pounds, packed the fish on the public wharf right under the noses of the customs officers, delivered it to Pigeon & Son, agents for the Boston, Halifax and Prince Edward steamship line, who shipped it for Boston.

Consul-General Phelan frankly admits that the [illegible] has taken place and said the fact spoke for itself. The shipment was not made under the modus vivendi, but under rights claimed by the United States [illegible] the treaty of 1818. The Canadian government [illegible] as known, [illegible] the United States [illegible] for other reasons known [illegible] the transhipment and [illegible] that they have not interfered as [illegible] that the transhipment is [illegible] with the opinion of the Canadian government [illegible] the Canadian position.

Ordered to Hayti.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—Orders were received by the navy department to-day for the sloops-of-war Galena and Yantic to sail from New York to-morrow for Port au Prince, Hayti, to enforce the demand of this government for the release of the American Haytian Bank. They will sail in company and be under the command of Rear Admiral Jeffers, who has been instructed to take the Galena. The owner of the Haytian Republic, by special permission of the secretary of the navy, will be a passenger on the Galena. It is therefore expected the vessel will be ordered to him as soon as it gets into the possession of the naval officers. Secretary Whitney declined to talk about the Haytian troubles, on the ground that there was nothing to add to what already has appeared in the newspapers.

Quiet at Birmingham.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., December 11.—Excitement over the affair of Saturday night has abated. Troops are still here and will remain several days. Governor Seay came up from Montgomery last night. He says this morning he will keep the troops here as long as there is any evident necessity for them. The coroner's investigation will begin this afternoon or to-morrow. No new development of importance in the Hawes murder mystery.

BIRMINGHAM, December 11.—Governor Seay had an interview with Sheriff Smith to-day, and said afterwards that he endorsed the sheriff and was glad Jefferson county had a sheriff who, no matter how painful his duty, could uphold the law. Beginning to-night the troops will be sent away, one company at a time, until all are gone.

The Death Roll.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—A conference of democratic senators was held last evening, at which the senate substitute for the Mills bill was under consideration. No vote was taken. The gathering being merely a conference not a caucus. It was unanimously determined to make no factious opposition to the bill, but let it take its regular course. The views of democratic senators on the bill, however, will be made known as each paragraph is read, and amendments deemed necessary and just will be offered.

The Maxwell Grant Question.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—The Maxwell land grant question came up in the house committee on private land claims to-day, but nothing of a definite nature resulted. The committee is in favor of reimbursing those settlers who located on the land under the decision of government officers that they were public lands and subject to entry, but have not decided on the mode by which the value of their claims shall be ascertained. It is proposed to give the settlers the right to make entries for an area of land equal to that of which they were dispossessed under the decisions of the supreme court, and to indemnify them for the value of their improvements.

The sub-committee reported two propositions. One was to send a commission to ascertain the amount of such settlers' losses, and the other was to give them the right to go into court and prove [illegible]. The committee took no action on these propositions, but referred them back to the sub-committee for further consideration. Representative McCreary, chairman of the committee, has resigned, having succeeded Mr. Belmont as chairman of the foreign affairs committee. General Weaver, the second member on the list, declined to serve as chairman for the reason that he is at the head of the committee on patents, and Mr. Glover, of Missouri, was then made chairman.

Crisis of the Panama Canal.

PARIS, December 11.—The Panama canal crisis and success of the Russian loan absorb exclusive attention. Financiers have no hope that the schemes of the canal committee will avert the crisis. Credit Foncier directors maintain their refusal to advance funds to bolster up the Panama company without an explicit guarantee from the government with the assent of the chambers. Public subscription closes to-morrow. There is small prospect that the bonds will be taken. Reports that the government will eventually subsidize or give a guarantee for the Panama company are discredited.

Financial houses have their eyes open to the fact that America might not tolerate conversion of the projected ventures into a state enterprise. De Lesseps has his own schemes to serve the project by making it an international one. According to his plans England, America and other great powers will be invited to contribute in the ratio of their tonnage with the convalent share in control of the canal.

Investigation Requested.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—Chandler presented in the senate this morning a petition praying for investigation into the alleged deprivation of the right to vote for electors and congressmen in South Carolina last month.

A petition signed by 1561 residents of Sheriff's precinct, Orangeburg county, South Carolina, recites that they endeavored to comply with the registration law of the state, but were prevented that on the day of election they were refused the right to vote. A letter accompanying the petition which Chandler also presented stated that 2261 voters of Orangeburg county were thus deprived of the exercise of the right of franchise. Their names were taken at the polls as fast as their owners were refused the privilege of depositing their ballots. The petition and letter were referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Storm on the Eastern Coast.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., December 11.—A heavy storm is raging, wind blowing in shore. Crews of life saving stations are patrolling the beach. It is thought considerable damage will be done at high tide this afternoon. A large quantity of cocoanuts came ashore this morning. It is supposed from a wrecked vessel.

CALAMITY AT CANON.

A Disastrous Explosion of Gas Occurs in a Canon City Mine.

Two Instantly Killed and Eight Others Seriously Injured.

A Chicago Mill Destroyed by Explosion of Oat Meal Dust.

An Exciting Naval Battle Fought Off Chester River.

A Colliery Horror.

CANON CITY, December 11.—The city was startled this morning by the report that a fearful explosion had occurred in one of the coal mines of the city, and a number of men killed and wounded taken from the pit. Inquiry developed the fact that the explosion occurred in shaft No. 2 of the Coal Field mine at 8:30 o'clock, resulting in the instant death of two men, the mortal injury of two others and the more or less serious wounding of eight more. Its cause is no doubt due to the ignition of the gas [illegible]. There were fourteen men in the working at the time of the explosion, which occurred just below the seventh level and 1,000 feet below the opening.

A crowd at once gathered at the mouth of the mine, composed of men, women and children, and in a very few minutes it numbered fully 1,000 people. The piteous wailings of the wives of the men in the mine and cases of the children, who, although many of them are too young to fully comprehend the nature of the calamity, touched the stouest hearts, and brave volunteers from the crowd at the mine quickly offered themselves to form a rescuing party in the hope of finding their dead or dying comrades. None of them knew the conditions in the level where the explosion occurred, but all felt that their endangered fellow workers were ever ready to make the same sacrifice had the occasion called for it.

Their efforts were successful in securing the dead and wounded, and all who were known to be in the vicinity when the explosion occurred. The dead are Henry Wallace, fortieth of June, and Peter Galloway. The names of those mortally wounded are James Wallace, brother of Henry, and Henry Dodd. Their death is only a matter of an hour or two. Those seriously wounded are Thomas Cunningham, John Cosham, James Troyn, John Tuis, John Murphy, Thomas Shields, [illegible] and two others named James and Jamison. Of these all are in a critical condition with the exception of Troyn and Tuis.

From conversation with a miner it was learned that the mine has been on fire since last Thursday, and last night a party of men were sent into the mine to endeavor to extinguish the fire and remove [illegible]. The fire was under control at the time, and the men had been at work two hours, when the gas was ignited in some unknown manner, and the explosion followed with dreadful results to the miners. The scene at the mouth of the pit was [illegible] and wounded were being taken out was heartrending, as every one of the men was married. Wallace, the foreman, having a wife and five children, the youngest of whom is two months of age. The coroner will begin an inquest to-morrow.

A Mill Blown Up.

CHICAGO, December 11.—About 2 o'clock this morning an explosion took place in Oliver's oatmeal mills, a three story brick building on Halsted street near Fulton. The mill was surrounded by a number of frame buildings, and the roof of the mill was raised in the air and fell upon several buildings, crushing them. No lives are known to have been lost, however, outside of the night force employed in the mill. Of these Charles Miller, engineer, John Smith and Ernest Castor, millers, are known to be in the ruins. John Holmes, another miller, was blown out of the second story into the street and picked up fatally injured. A fire which ensued lasted an hour. The greatest damage, next to the building itself, will be [illegible] destruction of window glass in the vicinity. Entire fronts of buildings for blocks on either side of the mills are cracked and windows broken.

CHICAGO, December 11.—A battalion of twenty firemen and over one hundred volunteers are at work clearing away the ruins of last night's explosion. Ernest Casper, one of three known to be dead, was at work in the engine cupola at the time. The cupola was lifted [illegible] entire and thrown a distance of fifty feet upon the south side of the street. The mutilated form of Casper is somewhere under the wreck. John Christensen, kiln man, is the second known victim, his body has not been found. Charles Miller, the engineer, is also buried under the debris. The proprietor and manager of the mill were on the ground early this morning, but have been unable to learn positively the cause of the explosion. Most thinks oatmeal dust may have caused it, but the terrific force is unprecedented if this theory be accepted. No other reasonable explanation is offered, however. Plate glass was shattered and buildings shaken to and fro.

CHICAGO, December 11.—A body supposed to be that of Engineer Miller was unearthed at 11 o'clock, badly burned and mangled. It had been thrown a considerable distance. The boilers have been uncovered and found intact so the explosion was certainly of mob dust. The police say no dynamite was used.

The body of Ernest Casper has been dug out of the ruins.

War on the Oyster Grounds.

ANNAPOLIS, December 11.—For [illegible] been an engagement between the state steamer Governor McLane and a fleet of dredgers in the mouth of Chester river. Four dredgers were boarded and their dredges cut from their moorings. Forty rounds were fired from the navy [illegible].

BALTIMORE, December 11.—Late night's fight at the mouth of the Chester river may have resulted in considerable loss of life, as Peter Mullins, cook on board the schooner Julia A. Jones, says he was the only man out of a crew of eleven to escape. The state vessels were hotly assailed by the dredgers [illegible] ably armed with repeating rifles, and did not return the fire until compelled. The steamer McLane was thoroughly riddled with bullets, and Captain Howard determined to resort to extreme measures.

Ranking the steamer off from the fleet of seven dredgers, which were tied together, he singled out the Julia A. Jones and putting on a full head of steam, rammed directly for her stern, striking fairly, and the schooner sunk almost instantly. Mullen escaped by climbing up the steamer's anchor chains, but says the rest of the crew were on the forepeak and could not have gotten out.

As soon as the McLane got cleared from the wreck she was again headed off and again headed for the fleet, striking the schooner J. C. Maloney squarely in the stern. She at once commenced to sink, and the remainder of the fleet got away as fast as possible. Some of the crew of the Maloney escaped by climbing on board the McLane, and as each one came aboard he was put in the hold.

A white man named Coleman and a negro named Bramble of the crew of the Maloney are believed to have been drowned, as they were not seen after the vessels were struck. A large fleet of dredgers is expected to be on unlawful ground to-night, and it is not unlikely there will be another fight before morning.

Fifteenth Congress.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—Frye's resolution of yesterday, instructing the committee on foreign relations to inquire into the state of affairs in the Samoan Islands, was reported back from the committee on contingent expenses and agreed to.

The senate then resumed consideration of the tariff bill, the pending question being Harris' amendment to reduce the duty on beams, girders, etc., from 1 1/10 cents per pound to 6/10 of a cent.

Vest, referring to Sherman's speech of yesterday, denied the assertion that the late election settled the question of tariff legislation. He (Vest) was not disheartened by those results, because it was, in his judgment, subversion of the principles of government. Although the senator from Ohio might be right, in stating that [illegible] tariff principle, he absolutely denied in most emphatic terms that it settled the question as to details of the bill. The people had not meant to endorse the senate substitute. For himself he would exercise his right to criticize and oppose every single provision of the substitute, although it should take up the balance of the session. Vest denied the accuracy of the statement made by Sherman yesterday that there was a reduction of ten per cent in the metal schedule by the senate substitute.

Sherman reaffirmed his statement, and said the reduction was over 10 per cent.

After a long debate Harris' amendment to reduce the duty on steel beams from 1 1/10 cents to 6/10 of a cent per pound was rejected, yeas 20, nays 29.

The rate was then on motion of Vest and with the support of Allison and the republicans, fixed at one cent a pound.

An amendment offered by Jones, of Arkansas, to make cotton ties free of duty, gave rise to a long discussion.

It was not disposed of, the senate going into executive session and soon adjourned.

HOUSE.

After reading the journal the house went into committee of the whole on the direct tax bill.

Allen, of Mississippi, could find no [illegible] the direct tax.

Seney, of Ohio, supported the bill.

After further debate the committee rose and the house adjourned.

Fixing Western Freights.

CHICAGO, December 11.—The Western Freight association met to-day at Chairman Faithorn's office. The question of whether uniform rates should be made on lumber to Missouri river points was referred to a committee with instructions to report to-morrow. Action relative to rates on packing house products, live [illegible] was temporarily deferred. It was decided to establish commodity rates on cord wood, lumber and logs, those articles in car loads having been taken out of classification.

A Matricide Hanged.

RIVER HEAD, L. I., December 11.—Ax. Astor Hawkins was hanged this morning of his mother, because she opposed his marriage with a young woman to whom he was engaged, Hattie Schatock. The deed was committed in October, '87. Hawkins is connected with many prominent people hereabout. Recently his girl smuggled a file into his cell to assist him to escape.

Pensions Bill Favored.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—The house committee on military affairs to-day ordered a favorable report on the bill to place Gen. John C. Fremont on the retired list as a major general.

COUNT TOLSTOI.

A Morning with the Famous Russian Novelist.

The Rev. Theodore Van Ness' Visit to Yasnaia Poliana.

Description of the Study where the Great Reformer Writes.

Hero Worship Has Not Died Out Yet.

The Rev. Mr. Theodore Van Ness of Unity church, Denver, delivered his lecture on "A Morning with Tolstoi," in the lecture room of Unity church last night. The room was well filled by an audience which was deeply interested in Mr. Van Ness' account of the visit which he paid to the great novelist during his tour through Russia. Mr. Van Ness said:

Hero worship, I have not died out yet. We look to the man whose writings contain noble thoughts, generous impulses, and high ideals. We admire still more that man whose life for the race, going out in practical acts, is a common manifestation of the divine within us, and shows our own base lives and selfish purposes.

When a great writer and a great doer are combined, when the same man not only writes divinely, but lives divinely, is not that man worth going to see even though several miles stretch between you and him?

We all love great men. A glimpse of Emerson, a morning with Tolstoi—these men God cherish more dearly than any others that have come to me.

A step forward, an impulse for the higher, a whiff of rarer atmosphere, a moment's presence with something more nearly God like. These are things which cannot be put in words, but are felt when one has contact with a great soul.

Our own novelist Howells puts Tolstoi at the head of modern novelists. The French go still further. When Flaubert read Turgenieff a translation of Tolstoi he cried out in a voice of thunder, stamping at the same time upon the floor, "He is a second Shakspeare." You will find Unitarian Parker, of the Episcopalian church and Maud Savage of the Unitarian church and a score of other divines, from as many different denominations, discussing that man as a religious teacher and leader. You will also find historical critics discussing him from the side of the historian. De Vogue says that whoever wants to understand Russian in this nineteenth century must read Tolstoi, and whoever would undertake to write a history of that country would utterly fail in his task if he neglected to consult "War and Peace," that exhaustless repository of the national life.

What then, is Tolstoi?

Historian, novelist, religious reformer, or what? for he seems to be classed on every side. He is modern Russia personified, for as Carlyle puts it "all things that we see standing accomplished in the world are properly the outer material result, the practical realization and embodiment of thoughts that dwell in great minds."

It was a cold crisp morning in mid December when I went to see Count Tolstoi. I had taken the evening train from Moscow to Tula, arriving at the [illegible] station at 3 o'clock in the morning. On the cars I had the pleasure of traveling with some Russian notables who discussed very freely the count and his work, and as the present new version in the way of a Christian commune association. While these fellow countrymen and old friends freely acknowledged his literary genius, it was plain to see that they looked on the present attempt at universal brotherhood with a mixture of good natured raillery which came from their believing that the count, at the present time, was not quite accountable for his actions. "A little queer here," as Prince D. [illegible] expressed it, significantly tapping his forehead. "Why," he continued, "he actually tries now and then to make shoes and very bad shoes they are, too, which he sells at a high price. Last spring he tried to make a story. I happened to meet one of his men not long ago and so I inquired how the story was getting along. 'Oh, it fell over, just as we expected,' replied the man," and then the prince burst immoderately at this disastrous end of the count's latest mechanical attempt. And so, too, did the rest of the party, for they all considered it a good joke. In fact, the upper classes of Russia are inclined to look on this whole business at Yasnaia Poliana as a huge burlesque, the latest eccentricity of a most eccentric genius. On the whole it is well that they do, for this laughing sort of contempt is a great protection to the count and gives him opportunity to do many things that if the government took him more seriously, would not even be tolerated.

This conversation, with the many things I had read in foreign papers, made me very anxious to see whether the real man would prove so entirely different from that ideal writer which my imagination had pictured. Bidding my new friends good-bye, I was soon jolting along over the roughly paved streets of the town to the London hotel, where I was told I could make all necessary preparations for my further journey to Yasnaia Poliana. Here the first difficulty met me. At that early hour I could find no one around the hotel who spoke anything but Russian. As I had not expected this, I was entirely unprepared, and knew not how to make the complicated arrangements necessary in order to hire a conveyance and a driver to take me from Tula to the country residence of the count and get me back again to the railway station. It is wonderful, however, what can be done by signs, plus paper and lead pencil, and in less than half an hour a droshky stood before the door with its comfortable robes on the seat, and the driver mounted to his place on the box. The whole rig, of course, was thoroughly Russian, the carriage partaking of a [illegible] construction. Viewed from every side, so that its floor was scarcely over a foot from the ground. The four small wheels were strong and heavy and helped give a solid and substantial look. The horses, three in number, were hitched abreast. They were splendid looking animals, full of fire and spirit, and had to go in them, as I soon found out. The centre horse was a powerful animal and had over his neck a hoop which connected the ends of the thills or shafts. Attached to the apex of this hoop or "duga" was a big bell that jangled as we

Mr Thomas Tribe placed a new Hall safe in his store yesterday.

The ladies of the Christian church are making preparations for a grand supper Wednesday afternoon and night at the city hall.

Don't forget the bazaar and luncheon to be given by the ladies of the Christian church at the city hall Wednesday afternoon and night. Go and have a good time.

The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the parlors of the Congregational church this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Cooper will conduct a mothers' meeting.

A. S. Wickum and J. S. Worley were tried in Justice Corman's court yesterday for assaulting Mr. W. F. Dixon, the keeper of the Cheyenne toll road, on the night of the 5th inst. After hearing the testimony the justice discharged the defendants.

The reports of the secretary and treasurer of the El Paso Lodge No. 28, A. F. and A. M., at the annual meeting held on Saturday night showed the lodge to be in a prosperous condition financially and otherwise. The lodge now numbers 121 members.

Sheriff Jackson last night arrested Jerry Bryant, a colored man at Manitou, upon a telegram received from Sheriff McCarty at Pueblo, and also two white men at Colorado City, named Miller and Campbell upon a telegram from the sheriff of Arapahoe county.

A copy of the last number of "The Western Trail," one of the many publications which the Rock Island is issuing to advertise the road, has been received. The number is almost entirely devoted to Colorado, and Colorado Springs comes in for no little share of the general praise.

Mr Geo. R. Lee of Zanesville, Ohio, arrived in the city yesterday accompanied by his wife. Mr. Lee is a passenger agent of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and is in Colorado looking over the territory with a view to accepting the general passenger agency of the C. K. & N. road.

The public are cordially invited to attend the meeting of the University club this evening at 7:30 p. m. sharp in the chapel of the new Presbyterian church. Rev. Thomas Van Ness, of Denver, will deliver an address on "A Morning With Tolstoi," and will probably comment on Tolstoi's religious opinions.

One of our exchanges has the following: "Professor Carter is already well known in Denver as the superintendent of the art department of the Colorado Chautauqua, and in the east as for years teacher and lecturer in the Massachusetts State Normal Art school at Boston, principal of the Boston Industrial Art school and as a lecturer and writer on art educational subjects. All who have read his admirable illustrated article, 'The Industrial Idea in Education,' in the September Century, will be anxious to hear him lecture." Professor Carter will give one of his most amusing and instructive lectures at the Methodist church next Thursday evening.

Thomas O'Neil was found dead in the rear room of Cassidy's saloon at Colorado City at 9 o'clock Sunday morning. He was about 50 years of age and was usually known about the town as "Old T." He had been living in Colorado City for about five months in a worthless way, sleeping in saloons, and gaining a precarious living. Saturday night he went to sleep on a table and when called to get up in the morning was found to be dead. Coroner Davis was summoned but decided not to hold an inquest as he had evidently died from natural causes. Dr. Davis decided that it was congestion of the brain. He was a large, finely built man and had been working in the mines of the state before coming to Colorado City, and previous to that had been a sailor. He has a large family of children scattered throughout Canada and the United States. Two of his sons are railroad engineers in New York and one son named Dan is in Boston. They are all grown up and in good circumstances.

A quite serious affray occurred at the ranch of Dr. E. G. Walls, about fifteen miles northeast of this city, on Sunday. The affair as reported to the county officers is as follows: A man whose name was not learned, but who was in the employ of Mr. L. Hall, a neighboring ranchman, went to Dr. Walls's place and an altercation arose between him and a man in the employ of the doctor. They came to blows, and the doctor appearing upon the scene, he and his hired man proceeded to give the stranger a good pounding. Another man in the employ of Hall went to see what the trouble was and he also got into trouble and was driven from the place with a shot gun. The first man was quite seriously injured, and Dr. Rice of this city was called to attend him on Sunday night. He found him unconscious and suffering from concussion of the brain. There were two very bad wounds in the head. The doctor thinks he will probably recover.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1888.

SWEDISH ROYALTY.

Something About the Most Democratic Rulers of Europe.

King Oscar an Orator and Poet and Deservedly Popular.

A Large and Interesting Family who Care Little for Pomp.

STOCKHOLM, November 30th, 1888.

The royal family of Sweden has attracted a great deal of attention during the past few months. First, one of the sons sacrificed his royal title in order to wed the woman he loved, while his brother resigned from the Free Masons because he thought his brethren too narrow minded and too conservative for a man like himself, who is a member of the cosmopolitan brotherhood of art, and prides himself on being so "liberal" that he has been nicknamed the "Red Prince." There is something about such a family that is very attractive to republicans. Hence I propose to give your readers a somewhat detailed account of the rise and present state of the Swedish royal family.

You do not have to go far to find the causes of the bourgeois tendency to which I have just referred. There is less "blue blood" in the reigning family of Sweden than in the veins of their crowned heads of Europe. The grandfather of the present king began life as a private in the French army, although he carried in his knapsack not only the staff of a marshal of France, but also a royal crown. I have seen Bernadotte's humble little home in an obscure street of Pau. His father was a lawyer and he intended his son to be the same. But the boy did not follow his father's advice. At seventeen he ran away from home, joined the army, and after three years' service had succeeded in becoming a corporal. Seven more years passed and he was still a subaltern. But the French revolution made it possible for him to rise, and at thirty he was a general. At about this time the Swedes were looking for an heir to their old and childless king. Many princes were proposed, and amongst them a Prince of Augustenburg. A young Swedish officer, von Moerner, was sent with a letter to the parliament to Napoleon in order to get him to support this candidate. But the courier did not find the German prince, and, like many other officers of the Swedish army, thought that in those stormy days a soldier would be the best man to put on the Swedish throne. So Moerner simply went straight to Bernadotte and asked him to accept the crown, to which unexpected offer the French general readily assented.

When the lieutenant reached [illegible] he reported to the minister of foreign affairs.

"What news do you bring back from Paris?" asked his excellency.

"I have induced Marshal Bernadotte, prince of Ponte Corvo, to accept the crown," replied the officer.

"How dared you to do so without instructions?"

"He is our only salvation."

"Y[illegible] where neither sun nor moon shines," exclaimed another minister who was present at the time.

And sure enough, Baron Moerner was was taken into custody and imprisoned for a time. But the people and the diet approved the choice, Bernadotte was chosen king, and in 1810 the founder of the present dynasty entered Stockholm. A year later he was followed by his son Oscar, then a boy of ten, a dark-haired fiery little Parisian, who was accompanied by his beautiful mother, Desiree Clary, daughter of a rich Marseilles merchant.

To the old royalty of Sweden Bernadotte and his mercantile princess brought fresh democratic blood. His son, who ruled as Oscar I., married a real princess, one of the best specimens turned out from one of those many little German manufactories of marriageable princesses. She bore her husband five children, only two of whom are now living—the mild and retired Eugenia and her active, highly-gifted brother, the present King Oscar II.

Oscar II. is no longer young. Being the third son, he probably never dreamt that he one day would wear the crown of Sweden and Norway. In the year 1872, however, he succeeded his eldest brother, the beloved Charles XV. The second brother, Gustaf, had already been dead for many years. On his accession to the throne Oscar was already forty-three years old, and was not then very popular. The mother used to say about her two remaining sons, the polite, considerate prince and the rather reckless King Charles. "Oscar does everything in his power to gain popularity, Charles does all he can to lose it, and neither seems to succeed."

Judging from the interest shown of late in Oscar II both at home and abroad, it would seem that the king had at last obtained what the prince so long pursued in vain. Now, at the age of nearly [illegible] years, he has become rather popular especially in Sweden, though less so in Norway, and is widely praised throughout Europe as an accomplished gentleman, a cultivated student and an able orator.

Everybody who has ever heard the king speak compliments his voice, style and matter. His speeches from the throne recently in no respect similar efforts in other European capitals. When, arrayed in snow white ermine and red and gold mantle over his shoulders, a golden crown on his head and a sceptre, glittering with jewels, in his hand, Oscar appears before both houses of the legislature to deliver his address, his [illegible] voice, [illegible], without an accent, the large throne hall, and his hearers hang delighted upon his words. I have not had the pleasure of being present on one of those occasions, but I am assured that the king is no ordinary orator.

King Oscar is more than a gifted speaker. He is also a poet, as was his brother who preceded him on the throne. When, in 1882, he and his queen celebrated their silver wedding, it was remarked that his majesty had also been faithful to the muses for twenty-five years. For it was in 1857 that the Swedish academy awarded its annual prize for poetry to a collection of verse which, when the sealed envelope containing the author's name was broken, was found to have come from a royal pen. Among his poetical productions are translations of Goethe's "Tasso" and Herder's "Cid." The best known of all his poems is a collection of jaunty and euphonious songs about the Swedish navy. They have gone through four Swedish editions, two German and one Danish. All the poems of "Oscar Frederic"—his name in literature have been published in Germany as well as in Sweden.

King Oscar is furthermore a musician. His talents in this department of art were recently very highly praised by the renowned German critic Hanslick, who visited this city a few months ago. The rapid growth of the Swedish Academy of Music is in a large measure due to his activity when crown prince. He was then president of the academy during several years.

As a change from other occupations, Oscar II. took up historical research and has written about Charles XII., one of the grand heroes of Sweden. He has also long been fascinated by Arctic discoveries, and Nordenskjold, who made himself famous by the cruise of the Vega, owes a large share of his success to the king's liberality.

Oscar is a great traveller and has visited most continental countries and Egypt. When sight-seeing in foreign lands he [illegible] to the dignity of many of his less democratic courtiers. He thinks nothing of rising at four in the morning and will keep on the go until far into the night.

The king is very tall. I should say [illegible] inches, if such an expression is permissible in speaking of royalty. His hair is grey, as is his beard, full-beard. His eyes have a kindly look in them that puts you at ease at once. He is very affable and hospitable, and likes to have many guests at the royal palace, where, considering the fact that Sweden is neither very large nor very rich, things are done in a very grand way. Thus, you see lackeys on every [illegible] chamberlains bedecked with gold, state carriages drawn by six horses, etc., etc.

And this brings me to the queen of this remarkable nineteenth-century king. Sophia is a princess of the old house of Nassau-Oranien, and is now fifty-two years of age. She was only nineteen in 1857, when her marriage was celebrated in the chapel of the Palace of Biebrich, at the court of her brother, who was then the ruling duke of Nassau.

The queen is a deeply religious woman and beloved for her charitable work. Having been a great sufferer herself, she feels most tenderly for the sick. A fine hospital is just [illegible] under her auspices in the Djurgard park, in the suburbs of this city, and she takes an active part in the work of various charitable societies in Stockholm.

As she is a German princess, the queen of course attaches great importance to etiquette. At the same time her deep desire to relieve poverty of every kind, prompts her to favor what Carpenter calls "the simplification of life." Since [illegible] between these two interests leads to funny accidents. For example, on one occasion, the queen was told that some ladies did not care to be presented at court on account of the great expense incurred for a low necked gown that could only be worn on this one occasion. This was a revelation to the queen and a thought struck her.

"Well," she exclaimed, "at my next drawing room everybody must come in calico dresses."

"And must they be cut low in the neck?" one of the courtiers asked.

"Of course, you don't suppose I intend my guests to 'come in every day attire.'"

"But your majesty forgets that these gowns, too, will be of no use afterwards, for nobody wears low necked calico dresses."

"Ah! don't they; I thought of course they did."

[illegible] Princess Victoria, the [illegible] of Baden, a granddaughter of the late Emperor William. She was born in 1862, and was carried by her grandmother, the Empress Augusta, to the baptismal font which was filled with water from the Jordan, a gift of the renowned Bishop Gobat. She was educated with some other girls in Karlsruhe in an institution called the "Princess school," and was taught not only the ordinary branches of learning but also the culinary art. The aim of the instruction seems to have been to produce a model German "Hausfrau," and, in the case of the Swedish crown princess, this end was attained. Princess Victoria now often does a cook's attire, and makes omelettes, her grandfather's favorite dish, as well as toothsome pancakes.

Princess Victoria takes a warm interest in [illegible] Swedish decorative art, and has founded at Tullgarn an industrial school where old national styles are revived. This interest in Swedish art industries dates from her arrival in this city as a bride, when she found her study in the royal palace decorated with embroidered curtains and with rich carpets made from ancient Swedish patterns by Swedish women. From that moment she became the patroness of the Society of the Friends of Decorative Art, and is now its honorary president.

The prince gives personal attention to the education of his little sons, the eldest of whom seems to have inherited his mother's strong will and sense of duty. When the little fellow had attained his fifth year, he was allowed on one occasion to be present at the ceremonies attending the opening of the diet and for a long half hour he had to stand at his mother's chair without moving. When he showed some signs of weariness a motion from the princess's finger checked him. This first public appearance of the crown prince of the future was so creditable that the little fellow was highly complimented on all sides.

Prince Oscar, sometimes called the "Sea Prince," being like his father before him a naval officer, is about a year younger than the crown prince, and is unquestionably the most popular member of the Swedish royal family. As a boy at school, as a student at Upsala university, as an officer at sea, he was always very popular and everywhere made warm friends. He is adored by the old sailors of Stockholm whom the prince visits every Christmas in their humble homes in the poor quarters of the city. He is one of the founders of an active philanthropic society known as The Friends of the Poor and takes a deep interest in its work.

Prince Oscar is the only member of the royal family who has visited the United States whither he went during the centennial year, in 1876, as a cadet on a Swedish man-of-war. Who knows but that the impressions then received strengthened in him those democratic tendencies which have since changed the whole course of his life?

The recent marriage of the prince has been fully written about. In Miss Ebba Munck, Prince Oscar has found a wife who enters into all his favorite work. Having experienced early in life sorrows that gave a serious turn to her mind, this estimable young lady, at one time a maid of honor in the household of the crown princess, left the royal palace to devote herself entirely to charitable work. Her father was once a colonel in the Swedish army, and later postmaster of the town famous for Swedish matches, Jonkoping.

Community of views between her and the prince awakened in the latter so deep a love that he did not hesitate to sacrifice [illegible] the succession [illegible] the throne. [illegible] the king's consent [illegible] the marriage [illegible] the king [illegible] Prince Oscar from this step. But the young couple [illegible] on the parishes. The bride's strong head and [illegible] bearing have been much praised. But she has been made to feel that she is not in any sense [illegible] was not a court carriage, but an ordinary hackney from a city livery stable that took her to the royal palace on the occasion of the announcement of her betrothal, and she did not appear at the court party which followed.

His royal highness, the Duke of Gotland, is now a private citizen, bearing the old family name of Bernadotte. The prince, who is still an officer in the royal navy, resides at Carlskrona, a naval station. In the neighborhood is his summer home, a pretty villa overgrown with vines and surrounded with green lawns. In fine weather the prince and princess are often seen walking to church on Sundays, or going down to the landing on week days in order to take a boat to town.

When they first arrived at Carlskrona, the prince and his wife had some queer experiences owing to the fact that they were not known. Thus on one occasion the prince entered the custom house and politely asked to be informed whether a ship which was to bring him some goods had arrived. The clerks were very busy, and the only answer the prince got was an abrupt "no." "When is it due?" he asked again.

"Don't know," was the curt reply.

"Please send me word when it comes."

"What name?"

"Bernadotte."

The clerk made apologies, the prince smiled, and thenceforth he was well known in Carlskrona, at least at the custom house.

The young couple are now very much beloved in Carlskrona, especially by the poor. They are often seen visiting some humble cottage in the neighboring country district, followed by a large dog carrying in his mouth a basket which contains many little things that give joy to the flaxen haired children of the peasantry.

The third brother, Prince Charles, is considered one of the handsomest men in all Sweden. He is an officer in the army.

The last and youngest brother, Prince Eugene, is an art student in Paris. He works in the studio of M. Gérôme, who, as I know, has many fine things to say of the talents and industry of his high-born pupil. During the summer months he may be seen in Southern Sweden, in Scania, in company with a well-known Swedish painter, both engaged in making sketches and in enjoying each other's society. The prince is said to bear a [illegible] Bernadotte—black hair, dark, sparkling eyes, a hooked nose and an expressive face, firm mouth. And he [illegible] in his veins a tinge of that democratic blood which made his great ancestor, in his youth, at [illegible] even too "red" for the leaders of the French Republic. In fact, something of this republican spirit pervades the whole family and recalls the sturdy old Norse kings of yore.

The Parnell Inquiry.

LONDON, December 11.—At the meeting of the Parnell commission to day Inspector of Police Ardle testified in relation to the disturbed condition of County Mayo. He said outrages increased after the issue of the anti rent manifesto. On cross examination he said he knew [illegible] societies existed but did not know the government supported such a society as the Counter Force league.

[illegible] Peady testified that because he paid his rent moonlighters visited his house and shot his son. Cross examined—He had been a member of the local league until it was suppressed. He had reason to believe the league was implicated in the murder. The league and priests belonging to it denounced his son's murder. The league did not object to payment of rents where 25 per cent reduction had been made.

How and when these eggs are hatched has always been said to be a mystery. B. W. STEELE,
[illegible] of the GAZETTE

Now is the time to send in monthly advertisements. Merchants should make known their business.

The ambitious statesmen who wished for a clean sweep and an appointment have subsided. In the last few days. They begin to realize that General Harrison proposes to do something else during the first few weeks of his term as president than consider the appointment of postmasters.

The board of trade is moving much too soon about our water supply. There must be an increased water supply before the next summer or there will be great inconvenience. There is hardly enough for what was the town before the various additions were attached. The town proper should first be properly supplied before water is given to the outlying districts. The outlying districts should be given water just so far as we can spare it. But another course has been pursued. Water has been given to most of the additions when there is not enough for the city proper. The council did right in this. If it proposes to arrange for an increased supply, for the city does not wish to discourage improvements and growth. But the obligation is on the council to make some provision. The board of trade can help by creating public sentiment which will back the council in making liberal provisions. It is useless to take any half measures. Mr. Hagerman's forcible letter defined the city's prospects and we must make provisions for future water supply with that hope for our city's growth that the past two years warrants.

The question of taking the cabinet officers quite largely from the senate would be a good one, if it had not been the custom to weaken the party in power by it. Undoubtedly the democratic party in the senate was injured by taking Bayard, Lamar and Garland out at one time. The weakness was felt at once when it was found necessary to have Mr. Pitch take the lead on the democratic side when fighting the Edmunds resolution on the recess of February 1886. There is talk of General Harrison appointing both Senator Sherman and Senator Allison to his cabinet. This will be a decided injury to the party. It would hardly be possible to find a successor to Senator Allison on the committee on appropriations. He not only has had a very large experience, extending over twenty-five years in congress, but he is a very able man. After the Mills bill passed the house, the Kelley-McKinley wing of the party endeavored to prevent the senate from taking any action beyond voting the bill down. But Senator Allison saw that this would not show good faith to the country, and that there was good reason for the demand for a revision of the tariff. It was his determined stand that led to the formation of the senate tariff bill, and he probably saved the election by his action. Senator Sherman is also a strong man in the senate and is needed there as a party counselor. The great measure which is to be considered during this coming administration will be the tariff bill. In his knowledge of this subject and his wisdom in framing a bill, he is second to no one, except Allison, in the senate. With these two men out of the senate, there will be no leader on the republican side whose information and wisdom are known to be equal to the question of tariff revision.

Democratic Caucus.

WASHINGTON, December 11.—The first caucus of the session was held by democratic members of the house this evening. Springer stated that the main object of the caucus was to permit democrats to take some action looking to admission of the territories. Cox favored the admission of all the territories except Utah and New Mexico. He said the democratic party might as well gain the good will of the territories as their ill will. The people of Dakota preferred division on the 47th parallel almost unanimously, and he was of the opinion that their desires should be listened to. Washington, Montana and Idaho should be given enabling acts at once. The great territory of Dakota should be spared and democrats should secure the credit which would certainly come to them from the favorable action of their caucus. They had lost Minnesota at the last election because they had failed to admit Dakota, which was on the same isothermal line. MacDonald offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the caucus that the territory of Dakota be divided into two territories and states.

Cox offered the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the caucus that a day be fixed some time after the holidays for the consideration of territorial questions in so far as they affect the admission of states and that on any bill already reported or to be reported from the committee on territories there shall be no limitation on amendments which are germane and that the order of proceeding for the first week shall be on any bill affecting the territory of Dakota or the admission of any adjacent territory to state that the census does not seek to deprive any territory of votes taken on any pending.

Oates of Alabama dissented from the view advanced by Cox. He regarded the question of the admission of the territories largely political and believed the interests of the democratic party should [illegible] of the argument that admitting the territories at present would make their democratic. If the people of the territories had so little idea of democracy they should be left out until they learned better the principles of the democratic party. He believed the election of a republican congress with a majority of from one to three in the house would be followed to have down any increase to the admission of the territories. Let congress go slowly. Colorado had been admitted by a democratic congress and he saw nothing [illegible]

Biggs, of California, favored dividing Dakota and admission of Dakota. To shoot with the policy of presenting a territory being admitted in deference to the dictates of a political party.

Holman, of Indiana, supported the omnibus bill and offered a resolution to that effect.

Symons, of New York, said he would oppose the admission of the territories in every way he could and in 1884 with a solid, stalking [illegible] at the head of the democratic ticket, that party would march on to victory. He did not believe in sentiment of measures.

McAdoo, of New Jersey, deprecated any concessions to the republican party. McDonald predicted that if the democrats did not admit Dakota it would be republican for years. Let the democrats be wise. The tariff had not beaten the democrats in the northwest, but political mistakes, such as refused to admit Dakota, had been responsible for the result.

Weaver, of Iowa, favored the omnibus bill and the admission of all the territories except Utah.

Toole, of Montana, spoke in favor of admitting the territory, predicting that if that were done she would send two democrats to the senate, otherwise one would be republican for decades.

Wood of Missouri, said in 1892 the seat of war would not be in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, but in the west. Let the democratic party follow Horace Greeley's advice and go west and grow up with the country.

Voorhees, of Washington territory, attributed the republican majority in that territory to the failure of the democrats to pass an enabling act for its admission.

Without taking any action the caucus adjourned until Thursday evening.

The Pope and the Irish.

ROME, December 11.—A sensation has been caused by the pope's refusal to bless medals and reliquaries sent to Rome by an Irish priest who intended them for distribution in Ireland. The pope sternly said: "I cannot bless them. The people of Ireland are disobedient. They seem to prefer the gospel of Parnell to that of O'Brien to the gospel of Jesus Christ."

FALCON

Junction of the Rock Island and Fort Worth Railroads

A Boom that is a Boom!

Hotels, restaurants and private houses besieged and overrun by new comers and investors. 100 men have found steady employment and there is now work for 100 more.

An enormous exchange business between the two railroads, requiring a score of men and acres of side and connection tracks. Every stranger that visits Falcon expresses surprise to find so many substantial improvements, so much business and life, and they become inspired with a feeling of confidence at once and want to own property here while it can be had at the original low prices. Nothing has been misrepresented to them; everything that has been advertised and promised has been fulfilled to the letter.

ONLY THINK OF IT!

Where six weeks ago was but the remnants of an old deserted sheep camp now there is a $6,000 Hotel nearly completed, two general stores, one drug store, one meat market, blacksmith shop, weekly newspaper, half dozen restaurants, two large lumber yards, two railroad stations besides numerous private dwellings.

Still we need a hardware store, a clothing store, shoe store, furniture store, brick yard, grain store, livery stable and a great many other enterprises that this place will sustain and that will thrive and prosper.

Now is the time to invest in Falcon. Harrison and Morton's election is assured, and that means four years of good times and prosperity to Colorado.

[illegible] alone with. The [illegible] horses were [illegible] and [illegible] throw their heads [illegible] and [illegible] whole string. The [illegible] and when we got [illegible] the deepest [illegible] that was pleasant to hear [illegible] was as light as a [illegible] there were no blinders, for this [illegible] needed nothing of that [illegible] and the driver carried no whip [illegible] enough. He could make those horses [illegible] anything he pleased merely by the [illegible] of his voice.

[illegible] I had a good chance to study him, [illegible] my driver [illegible] from Tula to Yasnaya. He was [illegible] all Russian drivers [illegible] over all his [illegible] horses surfeited on Saffron [illegible] of an old woman's short [illegible] pants tube heavily padded in the back [illegible] almost to the ground. A [illegible] colored belt held it in at the waist [illegible] with [illegible] the height of those [illegible] swelling out at the crown half [illegible] and having a curious time. Take [illegible] dainty man in Paris which this costume and the effect is comical. Put one of these big Russian peasants in it and he looks as awkward and uncomfortable as one can well imagine.

Wrapped in my robes I gave the signal to my driver to start. He gathered up his reins, gave a queer sound, a sort of trol! l! l! l! and away we went up the hill of the main city street, its centre all torn up by a horse car company engaged in putting down its rails. It was a sight to watch my team. The centre still on a brisk trot the two outer stallions galloped, the bells jingled merrily and the whole fleet was bracing and curving. Soon we reached the brow of the hill and then before us stretched a fine white turnpike with dirt roads on either side. Away off in the distance we could see our road stretching between the rolling wheat fields, and the fine green of long stretches unlimited by any fences. Now and again we would meet a lot of peasant women, in their bright costumes, carrying on their heads or shoulders some burden into the town, then we would meet a long single file of carts hauling merchandise, the different drivers all walking together and allowing their horses to the line to take care of themselves. As we passed these teams my driver would give a quick, sharp shout and then the peasants would step out of the way, always touching their hats to me which I as politely returned.

I did not time our drive, but it seemed scarcely over, an hour, so steadily and rapidly did we go the twelve miles. The Ishoshick all the while had kept up a continual conversation to the horses. They apparently understanding it all and answering by doing what he wished. Interpreted, his remarks would run about like this: "Come pretty poison, let go thy legs! Go swiftly swiftly my beauty, and thou shalt have more oats than thine eyes have seen for a month. Thou art lazy to day, thou son of my heart. Will thou freeze in thy tracks here, sleeping? Look out for that stone there little father, carefully, carefully, this road was not made for the rear. What dost thou with thine eyes? Second thing. Thy mother's colts sought not to run into holes like that one. Now speed thee, oh kitten, for the princess has promised me an extra rouble if thou make it haste."

A turn off from the main highway, across a little stream, the entering thro' gateless posts into a fine driveway shaded by trees whose lower branches needed trimming, an open space and to force me was the summer residence of the man whom I had come so far to see.

Nothing beautiful or poetical about it. It was of the ordinary Russian style, long low and square, two stories in height, with painted sheet iron roof, the only thing relieving the plainness being a rigid balcony of stone and above a balcony with verandah. Around the house was a limited amount of clear space and some rather poor flower beds, but to the American accustomed to neat and beautiful country residences, even among the [illegible] of our eastern states, this summer residence of a Russian nobleman seemed rather shabby.

A barking of dogs announced my arrival, and a young man came to the door who addressed me in German, and asked me to alight and send my team to the stable. The count was out in the fields or over in the village, but if I would come in and wait he would return home before 10 o'clock and would then be glad to see me. My letters of introduction had preceded me and therefore I felt not quite an entire stranger.

The study into which I was ushered by the young man who introduced himself as the Count Tolstoi was door of carpet. It was not a large room and made smaller by being divided into two parts, a wood-en partition, unpainted, running about half way up to the ceiling. On this partition there hung a couple of wooden rakes, and a spade stood in the corner, where some pegs held a great coat evidently used by the master in his work around the fields. Opposite this partition stood an old but easy lounge and in front of it was a work table carelessly covered with books and papers. Next to the lounge and filling up the corner was another table upon which Count Tolstoi's tracts and pamphlets to the people were laid out according to their subject. In the niche of the wall back of the lounge is a marble bust of one of the Tolstois as the face is unmistakably an account of the strong family resemblance. Various small photographs and engravings were on the wall among them being a very good one of Charles Dickens, larger than the rest. Curiously peering into a book case which stood by the open door in the hall, I saw among French, Russian and English books two by American authors, Whittier's poems and the Literary Remains of Henry James. As I had some time to wait before the Count appeared, I took up the latter book and saw that it was well worn and had evidently seen use.

A young girl about 15 years of age came into the room to welcome me. She spoke excellent English as did also another of Tolstoi's children, a boy of 19 who was under the charge of the German tutor. Later on, when I was up stairs in the dining room drinking tea with the Count two older daughters and a son well along in his twenties appeared and the first thing they each did after entering the room was to go straight up to their father and kiss him, then afterwards silently bow to me and wish a good morning.

But I am anticipating. To return to the Count and my first view of him. As I sat there in his study waiting for him I had time to think over many incidents of his life and to ramble around the room in which so much of his literary work has been done.

If circumstances and surroundings have much to do with the moulding of man's thought then here where the author has spent the greater part of every year since 1880 should be noticed one of those things which have gone to make up his present character. What then were the noticeable things? First of all simplicity and secondly purposeness. Evidently the man who lives and thinks in this house derives little nutriment from outside thinkers. The books that lay around are few and not particularly engrossing. There is a total absence of art, no sketches, paintings or statues, in fact nothing except what I have already mentioned. What comes forth and is given to the world is woven from the subtle brain forces. The rank luxuriance of nature the varied sins and talents of a large family and the surrounding poverty, these and these only are the [illegible] which [illegible]

[illegible] Tolstoi [illegible] the Christian religion [illegible] I said "Mr. Sayce does not take the words of Christ as the final tribunal." "Why" he said "you misunderstand. I take the words of Christ because I feel them to be true not simply because they were uttered by Christ." [illegible] Mr. Sayce gave him some disappointment. He was surprised at the tone which he got. Unfortunately I said "Perhaps" I said "Mr. Sayce does not take the words of Christ as the final tribunal." "Why" he said "you misunderstand. I take the words of Christ because I feel them to be true not simply because they were uttered by Christ." [illegible] Tolstoi's views in the course of which he gave me his definition of a Christian and you cannot be such a Christian "he continued" unless it is willing to live in the simplest of ways. If I make a sweater to clothe my neighbor, or that dirty peasant, or I simply for my own comfort ease and happiness I am not a true Christian. If I make yonder woman wash all manner of underclothing for me down at the stream and thus expose her to cold and suffering I am not a Christian. If I compel others to do work which brings them in contact with degrading things and thus help to degrade them as I am not a Christian. If I wear shirts of a white and starched kind that others must labor over and sweat over and worry about in order to get clean and properly ironed, I am not a Christian, for in so doing I am instrumental in degrading them, worrying them, making them spend their lives in fruitless and unhelpful pursuits, simply for my own vanity."

These remarks naturally drew my attention to the Count's dress. I noticed that he wore a coarse shirt of grey linen blouse, buttoned up the breast and fastened round the waist with a leather strap, dark trousers of ordinary woolen, and plain, heavy boots. He had given up collars, neckties and cuffs, with vest and coat. His dress was as simple as it could well be made and nothing about it lent charm to the large, animated figure himself within, and yet there was a charm there—a magnetic, drawing influence not dependent on clothes. You felt it, although you could not describe it, and under that influence all that was noblest within yourself came to the surface. Tolstoi by his very sympathy and interest makes one talk his best. "Afterwards when you are alone yourself you will see the conversation should have become so personal and confidential. This is one of the characteristics of a great soul. He enters into becomes a part of all others joys in their joys, sorrows with their sorrows. It is the highest kind of sympathy, for first it all he has my interests as well as Why, wonder then that before such an one you feel not all your petty longings and desires."

Later afterwards when I was on my way to Tula that will such I had gone to Yasnaya Poliana with the final determination to get Tolstoi to do all the talking for my own selfish gratification, yet in reality I had done a large part of it, fully one half. Tolstoi absorbed me, drew me out his analytic powers analyzed me. Of all this I became keenly conscious afterwards. Since my return to Denver I found these words in a French journal of Tolstoi. It exactly expresses what I believe true:

"Tolstoi maintains a certain simplicity of nature in the society of his fellow beings which seems to be impossible to the writers of our country: he observes, listens, takes in whatever he sees and hears for all-time with an exactness which we cannot but admire. Not content with describing the distinctive features of the general physiognomy of society, he resolves them into their original elements with the most assiduous care: always eager to know how and wherefore an act is produced, pursuing the original thought behind the visible act, he does not rest until he has laid it bare, learned it from the heart with all its secret roots and fibres."

There is something fine about Tolstoi's face when he is in conversation, although [illegible] the broad, rugged forehead, the sunburnt face, the large and prominent nose, the shaggy iron gray mustache and beard, fine. It is strong and masterful rather than not. It attracts you by the inner something—the soul—rather than by the exterior graces which our imagination always throws around a great man.

About 10 o'clock, chai or tea was announced and we made our way up stairs to the large, common dining room. It, too, as well as every other part of the house was severely plain and simple. One of the elder daughters presided at the samovar and the count and myself were to stand to tea. The breakfast was an [illegible] affair, little being taken by the count except tea and bread. Although meat is served at dinner and supper, Tolstoi never uses it, he contents himself with vegetables, bread and tea, not even indulging his desire so far as a glass of wine or a segar. He asked me what I thought of the temperance question and whether I believed in prohibition. I told him that forcing people to do right through laws hardly seemed the wisest way to me, but that I was heartily in favor of any measure which would lead to a restriction of the drinking habit and help on the cause of temperance.

"I agree with you" he said, "I do not believe in prohibition but I do not drink any myself. I am—as you say—a teetotaler." It helps to give me influence with my people when I try to get them to give up their drinking. Then he told me of a case in point, how one of his men, a fine young fellow, had pledged himself never again to drink and what a temptation it was to him on the day when his child was christened. But now several years in the moment of temptation he said Tolstoi to him "to prove to yourself doubt your own strength and show to yourself and to me that you are a man."

In ways like this Tolstoi is continually working for the betterment of the lowly people around him. He told me of his efforts to spread his views in the [illegible] short stories and teaching the simplest Christian virtues. With the assistance of some interested Moscow friends he had thus published his Gospel so that he could sell them at the low rate of 14 kopecks or a half cent apiece. Thousands of them had been distributed, but lately the government had forbidden many of them and had to the work in that direction was greatly crippled.

As an illustration of government meddling the count told me how this spring he had walked from Moscow to his country home trudging along with knapsack on his back some 270 miles. At night he would sleep in the peasants' huts and during the day fare as best he could. Among other places he stopped one night at the home of an old soldier who lived by himself, a

WOMAN'S WEAR

Many [illegible] are now in the Dress [illegible]

It is announced that white [illegible] are to be [illegible] in Paris this winter.

A [illegible] being in dress material [illegible] have the new "[illegible]"

Ruffles [illegible] display [illegible] black, should be [illegible] all the material apparently going into the trimmings.

Among fashionable women of Paris, the caprice of wearing gloves of different color is said to be making considerable progress.

Unfortunately the "[illegible]" styles in dress are affected by young women who don't know an encyclopedia from a market basket.

Drapery on evening dresses is a study, and graceful and artistic enough to cause a shower of roses to fall on the modiste's head.

Monkey skin cases and muffs are included in the fashion [illegible] of the season, but there are as many monkeys in Africa as ever [illegible].

Tight lacing seems to obtain to an extent that [illegible] the beauty of the waist of young women who sacrifice more than fashion will ever be worth to them.

Braided jackets are [illegible] enough now to be expected to last [illegible] more especially as nearly all the "up stairs girls" have them on when they promenade.

Handsome wraps are of heavy black corded silk lined with fur and trimmed with either fur or the tinkled fringe called seed work. They are said to be an imported idea.

Fashion's old ornament, the mouche or patch, will be revived in Paris this winter. The black patches of Louis XIII and XIV will be seen on women's cheeks and shoulders.

No one ever knew such a variety in feminine hats as there is this season of oddity and eccentricity in almost everything. No two hats seem to be exactly alike, and yet each and every one is "fashionable."

The word transmission [illegible] exclusively to matrons' outer garments, but is now used to express any particular section of costumes, whether for the summer, the winter, the seaside or for traveling.

For street circulars, we are told by the fashion magazines, will not be wholly discarded, but will be chiefly used for evening wraps or for driving. They are too comfortable and convenient a garment ever to be given up entirely.

The furs worn very high over the shoulder of the [illegible] in Paris and Italy are being [illegible] in London. There is no evident reason why [illegible] the Spanish fan is the natural [illegible] the angles straining of every hair on the head upward to the [illegible].

DAUGHTERS OF EVE.

Miss Bernard claims that she has never quarreled with her mother.

The initial letters of the widow of the late Professor Richard Proctor are stated to be only $750.

Ellen Terry has sent her daughter "Edy" to Berlin, where she will study music for a year or so.

Mrs. Ellen Olney Kirk, the author of "The Story of Margaret Kent," is getting through the press a new book which she calls "Better Things."

Prince [illegible] Tuck is [illegible] a peculiar [illegible] in his country, royalty in England, nobility, of course, excepting the Princesses of Wales.

W. D. Howells's sister, Mrs. Angela Howells Frechette, has turned her hand to fiction, and will contribute [illegible] to a New York weekly paper.

One [illegible] is reporting the proceedings of the smallest [illegible] in the country. [illegible] $8.81. The seat allotted to her is [illegible] from the reporters' gallery [illegible] from the [illegible].

Mrs. [illegible], who is now visiting an [illegible] President [illegible] in Berlin, speaks both legal, and also to Gen. Harrison for a [illegible].

Mrs. [illegible] of the Japanese [illegible] Tokio, [illegible] "[illegible]," the [illegible] Japan [illegible] Mikado [illegible] Japanese [illegible] Schoolroom [illegible] are drawn [illegible].

Wrong Impressions Corrected!

No one should suppose because of the quantities of Indian goods to be seen in our store that such things are plentiful or easily obtained. As a matter of fact they can only be picked up here and there in the Indian country by persistent efforts. While on my recent collecting trip I bought everything I could find in this line that I considered desirable, without any regard to quantity, and I doubt if all other Curiosity Stores in Colorado and New Mexico together could muster as large a showing of the same class of goods. What is seen in our store constitutes about three fourths of the VISIBLE SUPPLY. It may be said in fact that we have a CORNER ON THE MARKET. We do not intend to take advantage of our customers on this account, however, but will give them all a chance to come in and COVER THEIR SHORTAGE before the prices go up.

We are having brief histories of some of our Indian wares printed on slips of paper, and customers who buy such articles for presents will be furnished with as many of the slips as they need for their friends. It will save much writing and the slips may be kept with the articles in the cabinet.

We pack for shipment, without extra charge, any fragile articles sold by us, [illegible] that inexperienced packing of such goods is sure to result in disaster.

We have a large stock of Gold and Silver Filigree Jewelry, this year, made by Mexicans in Santa Fe, and our stock of Native Jewelry and Agate goods is very complete.

We have just had five dozen choice genuine Indian arrow heads mounted as Scarf and Lace Pins, and have had three dozen fine Mexican Opals handsomely mounted in Scarf Pins and Finger Rings, all of which will be on sale this morning.

Some one asked me the other day if I bought any Opals while in New Mexico. Why, we have the past year carried a larger stock of Opals than all the dealers in New Mexico together, and I took Opals down there with me to sell to them at wholesale. We act as agents for the largest Opal dealer of Mexico.

(Copyrighted.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.

ENTIRE it is too late let me make a suggestion to all such maidens as may see this letter and who want to signify in some delicate and unobtrusive way to the particular dear Tom Dick or Harry their secret adoration. It is now nearly the end of leap year, and four more long years lie before us until another such occasion may present itself, and so it would be well to score upon the occasion of the Christmas tide and send the prospecting eyed one a trifle which may open his eyes to a fact never before hoped for, and that is that now is the time or never to offer his heart and all his worldly effects. No young lady could well send a present to a gentleman at any other season of the year, but just now it would be all right if the gift was not an expensive one, but a little thing like a dainty heart shaped needle case and pin cushion. P[illegible] find them very useful and handy, and they are a constant reminder of the suitor's usefulness of the woman herself.

I have known of two very happy marriages which resulted from the giving of a trifle like that. To make one that shall carry its greatest blessing it should be arranged ready for use. The shape, a heart, should be cut out of stiff cardboard or leather, and there should be three pieces of the card board. One is to have a couple of layers of cotton covered with silk, satin or velvet and is to be buttonholed along the edge. The two other pieces should be covered in the same manner, but between them should be a quarter of an inch thickness of cotton, and the edge bound with Ribbon buttonholed or cross stitched on. On the outside is a pretty flower worked in silks or beads. A pansy is most appropriate. A bow of ribbon fastens the pieces together and two ends of ribbon are left, one to [illegible] side of the leaf and eight inches wide wabered ribbon. On the right side is a bunch of loops and ends which reach nearly to the floor. The corsage is of white satin with the tulle draped across it in a novel but effective manner. It is modestly high in the neck and has old fashioned puffed sleeves. A fan of black [illegible] with ribbons to match and a string of old fashioned guinea gold beads encircles the neck.

How the young girls of today ought to be to think that they are not their own mistresses I wish to make them understand by pre[illegible] that she has was worn in [illegible] ball in France and [illegible] was fashioned here. The [illegible] dress was of yellow green [illegible] and purple, over a white [illegible] Thistle has recently been a fe[illegible] fashion but previously all the [illegible] painters and heaps of that period and [illegible] the unsuspecting attitude of the corsage bouquet, and from all the present signs we are drifting slowly back towards those times. Just now it is the Directory, and after that it will be something else, and more than likely it will be this. Even the new dancing slippers have very pointed toes and low heels, and they are cross gartered on with narrow satin ribbons, black or white. The slippers are in all shades of satin—that is, all the more delicate [illegible]

The new walking costume follows as faithfully as the [illegible] and plaid of the wearer will [illegible] and the redingotes are decidedly [illegible] with their frills and wide lapels and flap pockets.

It often amuses me to see the effect a dress will have on the manner of the wearer. A modest dress enforces its own quietness. One of glaring extremes allows a greater latitude in behavior, and many of these in Directory costumes develop a singular sort of swagger in walk, looks and general conduct. They exert a sort of mental influence over the wearers, and I believe that this style of gowns and garments will have an evil influence upon the women who wear them. What young girl can walk modestly as becomes her age and innocence along the streets with those accentuated coat tails and carrying in her hand one of those long canes, or deck with one of the Tosca bundled umbrellas? The girls know they are making guys of themselves, and they have to [illegible] to keep up.

NEWEST WOMAN'S CLOTHES.

The strict English society in the matter of riding habits is giving way, and the newest habit skirts are now being made at least a foot longer than they were. They did not touch the ground before, but now they do, and the result is that a lady on horseback looks far more graceful than she did before. The basques are as well shaped and fitting as ever. Derby hats, jockey caps, and half high silk hats are all worn, as well as boots and pantaloons of the same material as the habit. There is a great deal of riding in this city by those able to afford it, and this has developed a new industry for some quick witted ladies who are not quite so well off as the others, though quite as well dressed. These young ladies exercise their saddle horses at so much an hour, and thus get a free ride and are paid for it besides. The grooms have heretofore ridden these ladies when the owners did not wish to ride, and these smart girls made the others believe that it was better to have them exercised by ladies, and so it came to pass.

The same thing happens in another way. There are lots of people who wish to furnish their homes in the newest styles of modern and ancient all the upholsters on earth since the Deluge, but they do not know how, and here the impecunious woman of fashion steps in and for a consideration undertakes to superintend all the buying and arranging and decoration of the houses, and make every good thing of it. And there are others, this must be whispered, who belong to the exclusive set in Fifth avenue, who constitute "society" in New York, but they haven't got money enough to keep up this magnificence, and they accept certain pecuniary considerations for letting forward and under the shelter of their own respectability numerous others who have money and no society. All this is the fashion. OLIVE HARPER.

THE GIRL WHO DANCES

and he never has to swear at her because he knows that if there are no buttons on his shirts it is his own fault, for he knows just how to sew [illegible] she thinks he isn't as grateful to her as he ought to be. Just like a man!

Yesterday I happened into a large house which makes a specialty of evening dresses, and there I found [illegible] and dainty dress, particularly suitable for girls who dance. It is made of a foundation of white tarlatan over which a tulle skirt is gathered very full hanging in straight folds from waist to feet all around. In front is a short shaped drapery, which has on the left side pouf[illegible]
